

Overdose Outreach in Southern Oregon

Do you know someone who uses opioids: prescription painkillers like Oxycontin or street drugs like heroin? These drugs have caused an epidemic of deaths from overdose.

An overdose doesn't have to be fatal, though. The key to saving someone from an overdose is a drug called Narcan. First responders carry Narcan. You can have it too.

Narcan is an emergency medication that is legal, safe, and effective. When a person has overdosed, giving them Narcan restores their breathing.

An overdose is a crisis. But if you're prepared, you can save a life. Which is sort of like being a real life hero.

Worried that someone in your life might overdose? Join us at the Medford Library, Tuesday, Dec. 13.

- Get a prescription for Narcan, the medication that reverses an overdose from opioids.
- Find out when and how to use Narcan to save someone who's overdosing.
- Learn how to get Narcan from a pharmacy.

We'll have some free doses on hand for those in need. All are welcome!

sponsored by:

Max's Mission
for info: maxsmission@gmail.com

Medford Public Library

Tuesday, Dec. 13, 7-9 pm